Organic Pilsner

Butte Creek Brewing Company

Butte Creek became a reality in 1995, and began production almost a year later in the Spring of 1996. The 8,500 square foot building was at one time a beer distribution warehouse, and after a major remodel, now houses Chico's only true microbrewery. Annual production is currently close to 4,500 barrels per year.

The story begins with two beers, only one of which is still made today, Roland's Red and Creekside Wheat. At the time master brewer Roland Allen had 13 years experience and nine years as a brewer across town at Chico's "other" brewery. There were only four fermentors in the cellar, so they named each: Chico (an obvious choice), Groucho, Harpo, and Zeppo. The beer was unfiltered at first, and only available on tap.

Expansion was planned in the initial design of the brewery, and soon a new bottling line was producing 12 ounce bottles and their beers were available in six-packs.

Butte Creek's Gold Ale began as a Summer seasonal and was so popular that they decided to make it available all year long.

In the late '90s, the brewery added a few more tanks and a new 80 barrel fermentor to its brewing arsenal. The plan was to try some organic beers.

Mt. Shasta Ale

Butte Creek Brewing Company

They brewed their first batch of Organic Ale in June of 1998, and had bottles of Organic Ale on the shelf by August of that year. Organic Porter was available the following January, and Organic IPA was their first 22-ounce bottling in March of 2001.

2001 was a busy year for new beers, with the addition of Spring Ale that April and Summer Pilsner in June. They also brewed their first batch of Christmas Cranberry Ale. These beers were originally available only on tap in Chico bars and restaurants, but are now bottles for everyone to enjoy.

In the fall of 2003, rumors were flying around that they would be making a pale ale. Actually, the rumors were about Mt. Shasta Pale Ale, a smooth extra pale ale. The idea was to brew a beer that represented Northern California, and that really suited Northern California drinkers. They also added a new Organic Pilsner to their organic line, to suit the lighter beer drinkers.

Their brewery expansions in the recent past, including two new 80-barrel fermentors and an 80-barrel bright beer tank, will help them keep up with the high demand for their existing beers, and allow them to brew other new beers in the future.

Back by popular demand, this month

Winter Ale

Butte Creek Brewing Company

we are featuring three of Butte Creek Brewing Company's finest.

Organic Pilsner Ale is a European-style Pilsner brewed with German malt and Czech hops. The result is a clean, straw-colored beer with a refreshing, clean and crisp finish and noble hop aroma.

Brewed without any pesticides or chemicals, organic brews are their way of supporting a rapidly growing awareness of earth friendly agriculture.

Mt Shasta Pale Ale is a very refreshing beer. The label pays tribute to majestic Mt. Shasta, which towers over Northern California, just north of the brewery. A light bodied Extra Pale Ale, with low carbonation and a fresh, clean taste, this beer has a good level of malt with not much of a bitter hop bite. A very easy drinking beer that will surely quench your thirst after a hike on the hill. We like it a bunch!

Winter Ale is Butte Creek's absolute best selling seasonal brew. This is a robust, hearty, chestnut brown ale that is only available to keep you toasty warm during the cold winter months. A big brown bear of an ale that will not let you put it down.

Only Available November thru March.

Get it while it's cold....
